

A. BOURBON.—Monseigneur le Comte de Chambord, on the 29th ultimo, completed his fifty-second year, as his birth occurred on the 29th of September, 1820, just seven and a half months after the assassination of his father, M. le Duc de Berri, (February 13, 1820.) Forty-two years of his life, and more, have been passed in exile, as he left France in August, 1830, after his grandfather, Charles X., had lost his throne, so that, unlike Charles II, of England, he had to go on his travels again. Had the grandfather been a wise man, the grandson would have been Henry V, King of France and Navarre, at this time. On his death-bed, Louis XVIII said to his brother, so soon to become King, "Let Charles X take care of the crown for that boy," pointing to his nephew. But Charles X did not take care of the crown for "that boy"—and, consequently, the sole survivor of the main Bourbon line has no crown to wear. He has claims to a crown that he can't enforce, and the chances are that he will never again see France. He belongs to the antique world, to a world that has passed away as completely as the world of Pharamond—or that of the Pharaohs—has passed to darkness. He will not abate one jot or tittle of his legitimate ideas, and so he is almost as far down among the dead men as if he were sleeping at St. Denis—a spot that is not likely to be his final resting place.

In New York city are still extant five of the buildings used by the British as prison-houses of the American patriots during the British occupation of the city, from the 15th of September, 1776, to the 1st day of April, 1783. These old vestiges of that period of horrible suffering are the North Dutch Church, corner of Fulton and William streets, which received 800 prisoners; the Middle Dutch Church, on Nassau street, (the present city post office,) in which Sir William Howe crammed 3,000 martyrs; the Provost Prison, now the Hall of Records, and the old Rhineland sugar-house, situated on Ross street, and now used as an establishment to store paper materials. Among other interesting historical features connected with the Middle Dutch Church was the wooden cupola, (removed within the past month,) from which Benjamin Franklin directed those experiments in electricity that were the germ out of which sprang Morse's telegraphic system. This old building has been used as the post office since 1844, but it is doomed to destruction. It will, ere long, be pulled down, and a new Chamber of Commerce will be erected upon its site.

The tooth of a mastodon is reported to have been found in Clay County, Ind., which weighs ninety-two pounds. With an ordinary row of teeth the lower jaw of the animal must have weighed at least 1,500 pounds.

Would never be heard. As you know, dealing on the square will always keep the head level. Try Stultz's "AAAA" Plug Tobacco. Oct 15
